

FEMA's U.S. Fire Administration Launches New Podcast

Release Date: ?? 21, 2022

WASHINGTON -- The U.S. Fire Administration is launching a new podcast, with the first episode airing today.

"These podcasts are a new and innovative way to communicate with the fire and EMS responders, as well as their communities," said U.S. Fire Administrator Dr. Lori Moore-Merrell. "We look forward to insightful discussions with prominent emergency service leaders, health and safety experts, community risk reduction specialists and fire service researchers. Stay tuned!"

The monthly episodes will allow listeners to join our nation's fire and EMS experts to discuss the USFA programs and other emergent issues. On today's episode, Dr. Moore-Merrell and Deputy U.S. Fire Administrator Tonya Hoover will discuss agency programs and their vision for the future.

Subscribe to "The USFA Podcast" on Apple or Google Podcasts to get USFA's first episode in your feed or visit usfa.fema.gov/podcasts for more information.

